A THRILLING ADVENTURE. The 2nd of August, 1865, had been a close, sultry day on Pit Hole Creek. Brown (as I will call him) and I had a pine shanty on the Ball Farm, overlooking the whole scene of operations on the creek, and we had passed the most of this day there: He had written a letter to his wife that afternoon, and after sunset he proposed a walk Fassented, and we started forth. Our way led down the side of steep hill to the narrow flat slong the creek ; thence we might cross it, ascend the opposite bill, and follow the bank to the village, where was the Post Office; or we might pursue the path along the creek.

over to the Post Office.

I proposed the former. Brown preferred the latter, remarking that we might see something among the wells that would interest us. Unconsciously be proposed his own destruction. It is curious to reflect upon how insignificant are the trifles that control buman happiness, and even life; and when upon this evening I yielded to my friend. I unconsciousiy consented to his destruction. But his path was the one we took, and we pursued it amoug

The result was instantaneous; a lighted train of powder could hardly have flashed back more quickly than this comoustible fluid; the gas which surcharged the air exploded, and flames rushed into the oil, and the whole scene was a mass of fire Alter everything in the vicinity that was at all combustible had been consumed, and after the fire was, with the most desperate exertions and dangers, cut off from the adjacent wells and their accumulated stores of oil, this well continued to burn in a steady stream of fire, which rushed from the mouth of the pipe with a roaring noise, illuminating the scene all night. It was finally extinguished by raising a great pile of earth until it covered the pipe and smothered the flame. The flow of oil continued for a long time after.

PAY HER OFF. From Paris I hear that a certain well known Russian lady, who is trying to play the old game of Princess Lieven in European diplomacy, has incautiously caused a letter of Prince Gortschakoff's to be printed. Prince Orloff, the Russian Ambassador, at once telegraphed to St. Petersburg to know if the epistle was authentic, "Alas!" replied the Chancellor, " I see I am growing in years, for I have allowed myself to be deceived by an old womand Disavow her, my friend, andpay her off!"-Vanity Fair.
